ledge of it. He believed that it was a ruse of the opposition to influence votes against the Cabinet, by obtaining an adjournment.

Further arguments were indulged in, the opposition represented by Reps. Wilcox, Bush, Smith and others insinuating that the Cabinet were responsible for the absence of Noble Kanoa.

Minister Neumann said that it was damnable in its nature and manner of conduct to have this unjust aspersion cast upon the Cabinet. It was a low, contemptible trick, beneath the dignity of gentlemen, but in line with the work of political tricksters. He would say that any statement made bringing the Cabinet in connection with Noble Kanoa's absence was an infamous lie. Nothing but lies and slanders emanates now from the opposition.

Noble Baldwin accepted the statement of the Cabinet that they knew nothing of the matter.

Minister Parker also said that the Cabinet had no knowledge of Mr. Kanoa's whereabouts; he did not care if they did adjourn; the Ministers did not wish to hold their seats by any trickery.

Rep. White was in favor of adjournment until the vacant seats were filled.

At 10:55 the motion to adjourn to 10:30 was changed to 10 a. m. on the morrow and carried.

EIGHTY-NINTH DAY.

THURSDAY, Sept. 15, 1892.

Morning Session.

Assembly convened at 10 o'clock and prayer was delivered by the Chaplain. Minutes of the preceding day were read and approved.

Rep. Ashford rose to a question of privilege and stated in substance that he had been approached by the Marshal while standing at the Hawaiian News Co.'s window and threats were made of person violence to him by the Marshal. He detailed a conversation said to have taken place and suggested that the House take cognizance of the matter.

Rep. Waipulani favored an investigation of the matter. Suggested that Rep. Ashford bring in a resolution.

Rep. Ashford said that he had brought the matter to the notice of the House. He did not consider it incumbent on him to bring in a resolution. If the House did not want to take action they could let it go—let it go.

Rep. Thurston considered that the statement made affected the dignity of the whole House. Hoped that all would vote for the resolution which he would now present and read:

Whereas, Charges have been made that the Marshal of the Kingdom has made an attempt to assault and intimidate a member of this House contrary to the provisions of the Constitution,

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee are hereby instructed to investigate such charge and report to this House what the facts are and what action if any is proper to be taken concerning such matter.

Rep. Robert W. Wilcox moved the resolution be adopted.

Rep. Bush also favored the passage of the resolution. This was only a sequel to what was done last night in the attempt to smuggle away a member. This morning this is a threat to trash another because too bold in speech. There were members in the House who were crawlers and creepers, he favored fair play and free speech.

Rep. Kamaunano thought they were drifting to sea. Thought it would be better to let the Marshal and Rep. Ashford settle their own difficulties; they had happened outside of the House; if Rep. Ashford thrashed the Marshal he would rejoice; if the Marshal got the best of him he would be glad. (Laughter.)

Rep. Nawahi supported the resolution; the matter should be investigated; he doubted the availability of the Judiciary Committee as a tribunal; it might be biased.

Noble Thurston considered that the charges should be investigated. He did not believe that all that was charged against the Marshal could be proved.

After further argument the resolution was referred to select committee by a vote of 23 to 22.

Noble Thurston then presented the following resolution:

Whereas, Charges have been made that one of the members of this House was on the night of the 14th inst. called out of the House, taken to and retained at the Palace during the pendency of a vote of want of confidence in the Ministry in order to prevent such member from voting upon such resolution,

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee are hereby directed to investigate such charge and report to the House what action, if any, is appropriate in the premises in defense of the rights of the House.

Noble Baldwin moved that Rep. Nawahi be made the fifth member of the Judiciary Committee in place of Rep. Ashford. That would then give four members of the committee who might be supposed to be inclined towards the Marshal. Relative to the resolution he considered that no fair-minded man could avoid voting in favor. The resolution shows that the rights of the members of the Legislature have been infringed upon. It is necessary to have an investigation. Members of the House will stultify themselves otherwise.

Considerable debate ensued and finally an aye and nay vote was taken resulting in the resolution being adopted by a vote of 21 to 22.

At 11:55 a motion to adjourn was made, but an attempt to put it aside and force the vote on the resolution of want of confidence was undertaken.

The motion finally prevailed and at 12:02 the Assembly took recess until 1:30 p. m.

Hifalutin.

A writer in the London Spectator draws attention to what he considers to be one of the most striking features in the literature and oratory of the day, namely, the decline and decay of rhetoric, or to speak more accurately, of what usually passes for rhetoric. He happened to take up Dr. Croly's Salathiel, a novel published half a century ago, which attained a considerable reputation, and to his surprise found that instead of the delight with which he had read it in his young days, he found it absolutely unreadable by reason of the florid rhetorical tone, or, as we should now call it, the "fine" writing that pervades the whole story. The author is always on stilts, and never condescends to plain, unadorned narrative. His high-flown language, not for an instant relieved by the homely or colloquial, becomes terribly wearisome, and at length quite intolerable, to the modern reader. There is no doubt that a great change has come over the public taste since the days when books like Salathiel were thought very fine, and the change has, to a certain extent, even affected unfavorably the reputation of such writers as Gibbon and Macaulay, whose good taste in great measure kept in check their tendency to florid rhetoric. It must not, however, be supposed that the change means a dislike to well-written prose, to the proper selection of words and the artful construction of sentences. It is simply a part of the general objection to what is insincere and untruthful, which is one of the best characteristics of our time, and is shown equally in the dislike to "rant" on the stage and to "tall talk" in a public speaker. Fifty or sixty years ago it was the fashion to publish what were called "elegant extracts," being specimens of fine writing from well-known authors, and of pulpit, political, and judicial "eloquence." Burke was in great demand with the compilers of these books; and a favorite extract was the famous passage relating to Marie Antoinette, which was considered the ideal of fine prose. A similar collection published in these days would present an instructive contrast to the old ones. The best writers now aim at placing their facts and arguments in the clearest possible light, so that they may speak for themselves, all redundant words being carefully eschewed. It is not strictly correct to say that this shows a decay of rhetoric. Rhetoric, or the art of convincing the reader or hearer, is as much cultivated as ever. What has decayed is a particular style that formerly usurped to itself the title of rhetoric or eloquence, and that consisted chiefly in the use of swelling words and phrases and the piling on of epithets. This is now almost abandoned to Irish orators and those wonderful people in America who can lash themselves and apparently their audiences into a white heat of enthusiasm on the 4th of July.—Melbourne Australasian.
